Excerpt: . . . we will be able to explore how best to craft telecommunications provisions in trade agreements. Should they be broad, leaving domestic regulatory authorities to fill in the blanks Or should they be detailed, locking in rules now that will dictate how domestic telecommunications markets are regulated This hearing will explore these and other issues. I will conclude by stating that I look forward to continuing this subcommittees oversight over trade issues, especially when those trade issues affect a topic like telecommunication that is a core jurisdictional responsibility of this committee. At this point, the distinguished ranking member from New York, Mr. Towns. Mr. Towns. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Let me begin by thanking you for holding this hearing on such an important part of our economy, particularly with many telecom companies struggling and some even going out of business. A public official once said that principles were the most important thing to have in politics, and that his most important principle was flexibility. I am strongly in favor of securing Americas interest when we enter into trade agreements. And while I have no set position on whether the regulations should be narrowly focused or have a wider scope, it would seem that flexibility is the key to success. In 1996, I, along with the majority of my colleagues, voted for the Telecommunications Act in hopes that there would be competition in every area of the telecom industry. It is my opinion that competition in the marketplace should not suffer, domestically or internationally, due to the rigidity of international agreements. Because Congress passes laws, and we have been known from time to time to correct...
