On a positive note, there have been few, if any, slave raids over the past year. We will work to promote family reunifica-tion once a peace accord is signed. In the United Nations and other fora we have worked hard to maintain the inter-national spotlight on human rights violations and other serious abuses in Sudan. The United States continues to support important monitoring efforts to reduce abuses. In 2003, we provided four and a half million dollars for the Civilian Protec-tion Monitoring Team ( CPMT ), established by the United States as one of Special Envoy Danforths four tests for peace. The CPMTs objective documentation of abuses by security forces has drastically reduced such incidents in the south since monitoring began in 2002. In addition, we have provided a grant of one million dol-lars for the now operational Verification Monitoring Team, set up pursuant to the cessation of hostilities agreed to by the GOS and SPLM in 2002. The 12-nation Joint Military Commission to monitor a cease-fire in the Nuba Mountains was established through the efforts of the Special Envoy John Danforth and supported by a seven million dollar U. S. grant last year. We have used every opportunity to make known that any future relationship with the Sudanese government will depend on achieving a just and comprehensive peace with the south. I believe Khartoum understands clearly that observing basic rights and...
